

On-Air

Announcer: An announcer delivers, by varying degrees, the news, traffic, weather, voices commercials and public service announcements, and hosts all programming and music.

Play-by-Play Announcer: A play-by-play announcer provides colorful narrative of sports and reports the play-by-play action of live sporting activities.

News Director: The news director oversees the news department, assigns stories to reporters and staff, monitors the wire service, and is involved in identifying important local and national news. Often times a news director carries an on-air shift as well.

Music Director: The music director manages the play list. In addition, he/she coordinates the new music the station will air and helps keep the station in line with its format (i.e. jazz, classical, adult contemporary, country, oldies, rock, etc.)

Production Director: The production director assigns announcers, schedules studio time and commercial recordings, and produces commercials and station promos.

Program Director: The program director is responsible for the entire on-air presentation overseeing production, talent, scheduling, music, promotions, and features. He/she supports and executes the overall product goals of the station.

Careers in Radio Broadcasting

Over-the-air radio broadcasting is an exciting and rewarding industry with a wide variety of career choices. Radio stations offer both entry level and experienced positions.

Engineering

Chief Engineer: The chief engineer is responsible for the technology that supports broadcasting the station within the Federal Communications Commission-approved coverage area. He/she maintains the transmitter, tower, digital platform, and all internal/external equipment. The chief engineer also performs preventative maintenance on the station's consoles, recording equipment, processors, phones, and any additional station equipment and systems.

Sales

General Sales Manager: The general sales manager oversees the sales department and handles all sales staff hiring, develops sales plans and revenue budgets, oversees billing, studies the station's market, and develops all sales promotions.

National Sales Manager: A national sales manager works for the station on a national level, in conjunction with national reps, and performs/shares similar duties as the general sales manager for clients outside of the local area.

Local Sales Manager: A local sales manager works for the station on a local level and performs/shares similar duties as the general and national sales managers.

Account Executive: An account executive sells airtime to businesses in the form of on-air commercials and promotional tie-ins. Once a business agrees to advertise with a radio station, the account executive is the key contact between the business and the station for all future advertising, marketing, and promotional efforts.

Promotions/Marketing Director: The promotions/marketing director coordinates and executes station promotional activities for the programming and sales departments. He/she often creates listener promotions and fulfills many added value commitments to clients.

Promotions/Marketing Assistant: A promotions/marketing assistant works alongside the promotions/marketing director to assist in executing station promotional activities.

Non-Traditional Revenue Manager: A non-traditional revenue manager is responsible for determining additional ways to add revenue, often via publications and web site marketing.

Traffic Director: The traffic director is responsible for "trafficking" all commercials. As the link between sales and programming, the traffic manager assures that commercials required to be on the air occur at the correct time. He/she is also responsible for producing affidavits, or proof of airtime, for internal and external records.

Management

Owner/President: The owner/president owns the station, holds a station license from the Federal Communications Commission, and oversees all station personnel, and in particular works with the general manager to ensure that the station is following through with its sales and product goals.

General Manager: The general manager works for the owner/president and oversees all station operations. He/she must possess general business knowledge, leadership ability, sales and programming skills, and a technical understanding of how the station operates.

Station Manager: The station manager works for the general manager and helps to execute overall station operations.

Management duties vary from station to station due to station size and ownership.

Administrative

Receptionist: The receptionist handles incoming calls, greeting guests, and a number of key administrative duties necessary to keep up with the day-to-day operations of the station.

Business Manager: The business manager is responsible for the financial management of the station. Skilled in accounts payable and accounts receivable, it's the business manager's responsibility to keep station accounts up-to-date by paying the bills, executing employee payroll, and receiving, recording, and depositing advertising payments. He/she often doubles as the human resources director responsible for maintaining employee benefits, reinforcing company policy, and hiring procedures.
